Sensual, haunting & darkly funny.

Nobel Laureate, Harold Pinter, was a master at conveying the thrill, the mystery and the destructive force of desire.

A married couple. An old friend of the wife comes to visit.

The reminiscing in OLD TIMES soon becomes a dangerous game. What emerges through the haze of gossip and drinks, is that the wife is an unattainable figure to whom the two others lay claim; and that in talking over the old times they are reactivating a rivalry that has lain dormant since their youth.

"There are some things one remembers even though they may never have happened".

A brilliant, enigmatic masterpiece. One of Pinter's finest.
