27 ways to be born is a collective drifting through stages of transition, in-between, passage. Sensing communion and individuation, also transition states of natural/artificial, alive/lifeless, instinctual/reflective are explored together with the participants. The phase of start, initiation, and birth of a being or a process is experienced on a metaphorical level, throughout a series of mostly physical theatrical scenes that follow a simple, loose story line.

The performers invite the audience to take part in the performance according to their choice: from watching to moving, commenting, and sensing. We speak the language of movements and senses, but also deliver shorter texts in English.
