"There are things I remember which may never have happened, but as I recall them so they take place." - Anna

The human perception of memory, of where reality ends and fantasy begins, is explored in one of Nobel Laureate Harold Pinter's most famous plays. In this unsettling drama, married couple Kate and Deeley receive a visitor from Kate's past and what begins as a playful game of light reminiscing over exciting days of their youth, twists and turns as their recollections differ. What are the consequences when love and lust evoke brutal jealousy? Who had sex with whom, or who will? This threesome battles to make the truth of the narrative their own, but who will ultimately win?
